

[1] Elision: Even = E'en

[2] Trochee. Interesting change at this new deed.

[3] Elision: Do it = do't.

[4] Not sure this is a feminine ending, but the elision in the line is unclear. perhaps innocent. It scans funkily if it is not regular, so Check other editions.

[5] What is going on here? It's a short line. What is Aaron doing with the two empty beats?

[6] Trochee. Interesting that it is at the start of a horrific image.

[7] This is a truly awful act.

[8] Elision: Even = E'en.

[9] A funky scansion here. I think it is a feminine ending, but syllabically it is regular. Roman and Letters should have the stress on the first syllable. Is Carved pronounced Carv - ed.?

[10] The third trochee of the speech, bookending his most horrible act and dismissing it. Brilliant writing here.

[11] An interesting word here. Aaron has just described a truly awful act and then dismisses it with a "Tut", changing the rhythm and belittling a horrible deed.